THE END

During what is scientifically known as the Mesozoic period the dominating life on our world was of the reptile family and so, that era before recorded history became popularly known as "The Age of Reptiles." Man did not, of course, exist at that time which, if you can imagine such a great length of time, was from 60,000,000 to 190,000,000 years ago. These reptiles, or lizards, some small, some large, are divided into two scientific groups, those possessing saurian, or lizard hips, and those having bird hips. But, in the minds of most people they are divided by their feeding habits into the flesh-eating group and the plant-eating group.

Of the flesh-eaters, Tyrannosaurus was the largest, a terrifying beast that was more than 45 feet long and stood upon its hind legs. Of the plant eaters the largest was Brontosaurus, which reached a length of 80 or more feet and was so tremendously heavy that it had to live most of its life in shallow lagoons and lakes so that the water could help support its weight.

The most fantastic of all the Dinosaurs was Stegosaurus, pictured in our illustration. This strange creature was a plant-eater. It was over 20 feet long and walked on all four legs. Huge, upright plates, like armor, were arranged across its back, paired, from head to tail. These plates were the creature's protection from the onslaughts of the monstrous meat-eating Dinosaurs. Near the tip of its tail were four long spikes, its only real weapons of offense if attacked. But, the strangest part of this reptile was its head, so tiny in proportion to the rest of its body, and in this tiny head was a brain no bigger than a walnut. Of all beasts that ever roamed the Earth, this creature was perhaps the most stupid, so stupid in fact that it is a wonder that it could ever exist at all.

JOHN STARK, AMERICAN PATRIOT

One of America's great patriots and military leaders was John Stark. He was born in 1728 in Londonderry, New Hampshire and at a time when the American Indian still owned and ruled the land and waters of this great continent. As a boy, Stark became familiar with Indian raids and was himself captured and brought up by Indians. So great was his courage and so proud his bearing, even at that early age, that the Indians, in admiration called the boy, "The Young Chief".

The training he received from his Indian captors stood him in good stead later in life. When he reached manhood he escaped from the Indians and joined Robert Rogers' Rangers, fighting with this intrepid band all during the French and Indian wars. Due to his courage, frontier knowledge and daring he rose to the rank of Captain.

When the Revolutionary War broke out in 1776, Stark immediately offered his services to General Washington and was made a Colonel in the Army of the Revolution. He was a wealthy man and during the dark days of the Revolutionary War he gave his entire fortune to his soldiers to persuade them to re-enlist. He fought with Washington at Trenton and Princeton and, for his bravery, was given command of the New Hampshire troops which he led into battle at the Battle of Bennington. His men were loyal and would follow their fighting commander anywhere. He led them into the battle with an order that is now famous, "There they are, boys! We beat them today or Mollie Stark's a widow."

His victory at Bennington paved the way for General Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga, so, with his band, his courage and daring, John Stark helped shape the future of his country.
